MYTHICAL HEROES

HERCULES

Sofia Kominea Andreas Giovanos

To our parents,
our siblings,
and Michael.

In bygone times of old,
When demigods roamed bold,
Hercules' strength and virtues
Were known across the world.

Hercules, the demigod,
Was son of Zeus the Great.
His mortal mother, Alkmini,
Was a beauty of no debate.

Hera was green with jealousy,
And as a gift she sent,
Two giant snakes into the baby's crib,
Little Hercules to torment.

The babe's small hands,
The snakes' great necks,
Swiftly rushed to wring.
And with great strength
And not a thought,
Their ending came to bring.

When Hercules grew
And turned sixteen,
The time had come to choose,
The path he would Decide to take
And follow in manly shoes.

Upon reaching a crossroads,
Two women he came to see.
Each pointed at a different road,
And beckoned:
“Come with me”.

Areti was one,
Kakia was the other.
Hercules chose the first
As if there were no other!

*In bygone times of old,
When demigods roamed bold...*

This is the tale of Hercules,
A man whose mythical
Strength, labours
And great adventures,
Forever in history remain...
